DAVID LOCH'S TOUR IN SCOTLAND IN 1778 describing the spinning, weaving industries etc., in Ayrshire and surrounding villages.

In 1778, that is, 119 years ago, David Loch wrote a book entitled— A Tour through most of the Trading Towns and Villages of Scotland containing Notes and Observations concerning the Trade, Manufactures, Improvements, etc., of these Towns and Villages.

Extract of the book relating to villages of Kilmarnock, Irvine, Kilwinning, Saltcoats and Ayr.

“Ayr had 260 looms, of which 60 were employed in silk manufacture, while a few miles south of it there were about 190 looms, 55 being "in the silk way"; and that Kilmarnock had 426 looms, of which 240 were employed in weaving silk, and the rest in making serges, shalloons, duffles, blankets, carpets, and linens, had also a great manufactory of shoes all for export, carried on a thriving trade in nightcaps with Holland, and sent its manufactures to all the ports then open for trade. The lady who started the manufacture of woollens in Kilmarnock in 1728— Miss Maria Gardiner, was still alive when Loch made his tour, and we learn from him that she brought spinners from Dalkeith to teach the people of Kilmarnock. It would scarcely be to that town that one would go now in search of instructors in the arts of spinning and weaving.”

AYR.—Looms for woollen and linen are about 200, " and those employed in silk are about 60." " A few miles south of Ayr there are 55 looms in the silk way." " There are here about 190 looms, with 15 stocking frames."

KILMARNOCK.—" 240 looms are employed in weaving silk ; 66 in the carpet way ; 40 in the linen branches; 30 for blankets ; 30 for serges and shalloons; and 20 for duffles." " There are 6 frames for making stockings."

" Kilmarnock nightcaps are a good article for the Holland market." " A great quantity of shoes are manufactured here, all for export." They send their goods to " the West Indies, Halifax, Quebec, and all the ports that are at present open for trade." " The woollen manufacture was introduced by Miss Maria Gardiner half aunt to the unfortunate Lord Kilmarnock), who, observing the indolence of the people of that place, brought spinners and weavers of carpets from Dalkeith about the year 1728. From that time the woollen manufacture has been carried to a considerable extent: the lady is still alive" (1778).

IRVINE.—" There are 10 frames for stockings, 45 linen looms, and 40 looms in the silk way."

KILWINNING.—" There are at present 99 looms employed in silk, 40 in linen and woollen."

SALTCOATS.—" There are 200 looms employed in the silk manufacture, in and about this place, and about 40 looms in the linen branch."

Extract of an article published in July 1874 "RAMBLES ROUND STEWARTON"

The station offices are tasteful wooden erections fitted with every convenience for the accommodation and comfort of passengers. Following a knot of my fellow travellers who alighted with me upon the platform, I found my way to the Cross, and thence started on a ramble through the town. Stewarton, contrary to my expectations, proved to be a town of considerable bustle, and in a most prosperous condition.

The townspeople (I speak from personal experience) are hospitable, generous and kindly towards strangers, and are for the most part intelligent and deeply imbued with religious principles. All that I met with had the appearance of being cleanly in their habits, and untiring in their industry. The population numbers somewhere about 4478 souls; but doubtless, from the easy transit of goods to the large centres of industry afforded by the opening up of the new railway, the inducement of low ground rentals and other facilities to trade, the town will in all probability in a short time greatly increase in population. It is five miles from Kilmarnock, fifteen from Paisley and sixteen from Glasgow.

It is situated in a valley on the banks of a streamlet named the Annick, which flows from White Loch in the parish of Means, and joins with the Glazart at a place called the "Water-meetings", some three miles below the town. The ground round the town has a fine sloping appearance, and is withal well wooded. It gradually rises from the southwest to the northeast, and ends on the limits of Renfrewshire. From these heights the admirer of the picturesque in Nature can witness a splendid panoramic view. Stationed on this commanding position the beholder has a wide expanse of country before him. In the north is the cloud-capped Benlomond so beautifully referred to in one of Tannahill's songs; on the south, in the misty distance, the hills of Dumfries-shire and Kirkcudbright; while the spectator, has, as it were the Frith of Clyde lying at his feet, the bright waters of which are studded with the sea-dashed rock of Ailsa, the Island of Arran, the Paps of Jura, and in the far distance the coast of Ireland.

Stewarton is situated in the centre of the parish. About two hundred years ago it consisted of a few houses, which principally clustered near the church. Gradually it extended to where the Cross now stands, but within the last hundred years its trade and population increased to such an extent that it now traverses a line of street some three-quarters of a mile long, and terminates in a portion of the town called Darlington. From this line of street, a portion of which is called Lainshaw street - several small streets branch off, but for the most part they are lined on each side with unassuming tenements which are principally occupied by trades people. The most of the houses have gardens attached to them, in which the occupants cultivate vegetables, fruits and flowers, and with great spirit vie with each other for honourable notice in the Show of the Horticultural and Florists' Society.

CUNNINGHAME INSTITUTE

At and near to the Cross of this thriving town there are some fine buildings and large roomy shops. The principal building in the place is the Cunninghame Institute. It is situated in Avenue Square, and has an imposing appearance. It was gifted to the town by the late William Cunninghame of Lainshaw and consists of a reading room and recreation room upstairs, and a schoolroom called "The Academy" on the ground floor. I found the reading room to be a large high-roofed, well-lighted airy apartment. It is fitted up in the most approved manner, and is supplied with a small but well-selected library in which I noticed many standard works. The walls are adorned with large maps, and the tables are strewn with daily and weekly papers, periodicals, books and pamphlets. The recreation room is supplied with draughts, dominos, bagatelle and summer ice-boards - in fact everything seems to be done in the institution to afford recreation, instruction and amusement to the members. The subscription is one shilling a year. This trifle entitles the subscriber to the free use of the reading room, library and recreation room.

CHURCHES, etc.

There are many shops in Stewarton, the occupants of which retail spirits, but the consequences accruing from their dispensation are counteracted by a lodge of Good Templars and a band of young hopefuls who incessantly war against the traffic. The educational requirements of the town are attended to by an official School Board and the spiritual welfare of the people is amply provided for.

There are five places of worship in town all of which are attended by decorous congregations. They are as follows:- The Established or Parish Church of which more hereafter; the Free Church, the United Presbyterian Church, the Wesleyan Methodist Church and the Congregational Church. It is worthy of notice that the last-named place of worship was instituted by the late William Cunninghame of Lainshaw, in 1822. He had long been a member of the Established Church, and was highly respected by the members of that body - so much so, indeed, that he was chosen for an elder, but owing to conscientious scruples he refused to serve. These scruples were that he could not subscribe to the doctrines contained in the "Confession of Faith", especially that of the limitation of the Atonement. Upon leaving the establishment he published a pamphlet in which he set forward views on theological subjects and gave his reasons for seceding. The pamphlet, a copy of which I have seen, is entitled "Narration of the formation of a Congregational Church at Stewarton". When the Congregational Church was formed Mr Cunninghame became master, and conducted worship and discharged other duties of the sacred office for the space of 21 years. In 1843 a Congregational clergyman named Smith was appointed to assist Mr Cunninghame in the pastorate, for the duties had become onerous owing to failing health and increasing years. With the forethought and liberality characteristic of Mr Cunninghame, he has left to the members a commodious and comfortable place of worship, a manse for their clergymen, and a suitable endowment to maintain both.

From the rambling imperfect notice that I have given of Stewarton the reader may see that it is a town of considerable importance, and likely to become more so, since it has been brought into direct communication with the outer world by the opening up of the new line of railway.

BONNET-MAKING

From a very remote period the staple trade of Stewarton has been the manufacture of bonnets. So early as the twelfth century knitted bonnets were made at Bloak and Cutstraw; and when the trade was in a primitive condition they were made in farm houses, and once a year, or so, sold at fairs in the neighboured. My informant, a Stewarton bonnet-maker, with whom I accidentally became acquainted, and to whom I am indebted for an amount of information regarding the town, states that it was then the custom for females to spin the yarn in their spare time and to while away the hours of the long winter nights knitting it into bonnets and preparing them for the market. But as time sped on and civilisation advanced, the trade got into the hands of families, or rather, a small community who monopolised it, framed laws to protect and retain it in their own hands. Some of these laws were curious. For instance all privileges were carefully guarded, and no outsider was allowed to work at. The trade, a son of a bonnet-maker was allowed to marry outside the trade and bring his family up in it, but a daughter was denied that privilege and was compelled to choose a husband in the trade and stick to her needle. These laws at this day are null and void, and bonnet-makers and bonnet-knitters are married and given in marriage to all classes of society. Now the cobbler may leave his last and turn bonnet-dresser without a dissenting voice being raised against him.

The bonnets made some fifty years ago were what is known as the Rab Rorison" or "braid Scotch bonnet". These were substantial headdresses. I remember seeing one that a miller had worn some fifty years ago. After his decease it had served as a bag to carry weaver's pirns in; when laid aside from that it was used service of an old woman, who declared that it was the best washing clout that ever she had.

Some thirty years ago Glengarries were introduced and within my own recollection the Balmoral with its various names, shapes and styles. The bonnet trade is the most extensive branch of industry in Stewarton. Everybody there seems to be directly or indirectly, connected with it. In company they talk of bonnets. The visitor finds nearly every boy, youth or man wearing a bonnet, and smart and jaunty the men of Stewarton look in their favourite headdresses, with their silk ribbons streaming behind them. There will be nearly twenty bonnet manufacturers in Stewarton. Some of these are in a very small way, but the principal are the following: Mr Robert Sim. His works are in Darlington, and built on the bank of the Annick. He employs a great number of hands and is at present building a large addition to his premises. When completed, my cicerone, affirmed, it would be the finest bonnet shop in the district.

Mr Robert Mackay not only manufactures bonnets extensively but prepares yarn for them. He also has a few carpet looms, which I believe, are the only machines of the kind in the town, although the carpet trade was at one time extensively carried on in it. Mr Wyllie also manufactures bonnets extensively and finds employment for a goodly number of both sexes.

OTHER BRANCHES OF INDUSTRY

The next craft of importance in the town is that of spindle-making. This branch of industry is extensively carried on by Mr David Skeoch. The business was established by one of his ancestors some hundred and twenty years ago, and is at present in a flourishing condition. The spindles manufactured are used for machinery in mills, and are made of steel. Doubtless this business was originally established for the manufacture of steel clockwork, for like Kilmaurs, Stewarton was at one time famous for its workmanship in steel. The last remnant of it is now carried on in a very humble way by old Mr Wyllie, and doubtless, when he is gathered to his fathers the trade will become extinct.

Weaving is still carried on in Stewarton; but there, like every other place, the trade is sadly reduced, and it is only by close application that the artisan can make anything like a living. The giant power, steam, has superseded hand labour, and in fact revolutionised society to such an extent that the handloom, like the old stage coach, is now looked on as a curiosity.

A new branch of industry has lately been introduced by Mr Gavin Paterson. It is new to the town but it is none the less welcome, for it affords employment to about thirty men. It is the manufacture of boots and shoes by the process known as "sprigging" or "pegging". The men work at the bench and turn out boots by the dozen pair.
